

LARK CREEK STEAK

visiting san francisco means visiting the wine country—you're surrounded. to the north are Napa, Sonoma and Mendocino; to the east lie Livermore Valley and the Sierra Foothills; heading south are the Santa Cruz Mountains, Monterey and the Central Coast. each appellation is unique, possessing its own personality and strength with respect to the grapes grown and the styles of wines produced. however, each has a common bond: quality.

top quality wine represents a partnership between the grape grower and wine maker. sometimes they are the same people, but it is more common today for each to be a specialist. wines of extraordinary concentration and depth are more commonly produced these days thanks to aggressive vineyard management. many grape growers have turned, or rather returned, to organic viticultural practices. without pesticides, herbicides and synthetic fertilizers farmers are producing healthier grapes whose flavors truly express their terroir. while only a small number of domestic vineyards are certified organic, all growers are committed to practicing some degree of sustainable agriculture and organic viticulture.

at LarkCreekSteak we focus on the best farm to table ingredients. of course we pay a little extra attention to steaks and chops. with this in mind we've collected an exciting range of great american wine, including some old favorites, new discoveries and special values.

BY THE GLASS

Our wine by the glass selections have been chosen to offer a variety of styles and flavors in the hope that you can find a wine that appeals to you. Within each broad category, we have arranged the wines in a general progression of weight, intensity and complexity from lightest to fullest in body and flavor. As you read down through the selections expect the wines to be fuller and more intensely flavored, complex and full bodied.

we would be happy to open and serve any wine you have brought with you to the restaurant and for each bottle purchased from our wine list we will waive the corkage fee on a bottle you have brought with you.

Our corkage fee is $20 per 750 ml.

SOMETHING DIFFERENT

Start with Conundrum and then move to Lang and Reed Cabernet Franc. Conundrum is a blended white wine that consists primarily of sauvignon blanc, chardonnay and muscat canelli. The folks at Conundrum also admit to adding viognier and Semillon. They won't tell you exactly what else or what the blend is-but who cares? The wine is refreshing and different; with a rich texture, peach and vanilla aromas and sufficient acidity to ensure a second sip (or a second glass). Cabernet franc is supposed to be softer than its cousin, cabernet sauvignon, which is the grape you're supposed to grow in Napa Valley. Their cabernet franc features a mix of red and black fruit flavors with chocolate overtones and balanced oak tones and tannin. It is a nice departure from cabernet sauvignon, but still great with a steak.

HALF BOTTLES

half bottles are a great way to pair wine with food and provide a reasonable way to begin with a lighter wine and then move into something more substantial.

it is pretty easy these days to have a wine labeled for you. it is a different matter altogether to have one made especially for you. and really rare to have a sparkling wine made for you, because the commitment in time on the part of the winery is difficult to justify. Lark Creek Cuvee is an exception. We have been working with the Sterling family at Iron Horse since 1989 to develop this unique sparkling wine produced expressly for Lark Creek. over the years we have worked very closely with the Iron Horse team, developing and evolving our special blend. it all begins with a base wine of 2000 Iron Horse Brut, to which is added our special dosage. The resulting wine possesses crisp apple and citrus fruit flavors, it finishes with richness, elegance and complexity. we think it is the perfect way to begin your dining experience.

SPARKLING WINE

once upon a time the quality of california sparkling wines lagged far behind champagne. champagne was the gold standard and california sparkling did not merit a lot of attention. oddly, the champagne producers themselves signalled a change of heart when they bought up a great deal of california vineyard land and established "outposts" here. these days, no one apologizes for the quality of california sparkling wine, though we can understand the need to apologize for the price of champagne.

sparkling wine often represents the best value on a wine list. just think about the commitment in time and skill required to produce even an indifferent bottle—not to mention the great ones we've found. we've assembled a collection that spans from the every day to the really special. think of your favorite champagne tefe de cuvee and we think we have an american answer for it.

Riesling: floral, plum, peach aromas, body can be substantial, tantalizing "other" aromas can develop, like famous gout de petrol. And no, that's not bad.

Pinot gris: pinot noir clone, sheds acidity when ripe, picked early makes a crisp wine with subtle aromatics.

Pinot blanc: pinot gris clone, often made like chardonnay, which it can resemble from vineyard to glass.

Chenin blanc: surprisingly, one of the most widely planted varietals in California. Can make an uninteresting wine, but we don't sell those.

Viognier: popularity benefits from the "Anything But Chardonnay" phenomenon – reaction to an overabundance of similar, expensive chardonnays. Hard to grow, can make a wine with weight and exotic floral aromas.

Marsanne: low acidity and round mouth feel, subtle citrus or floral aroma.

Roussane: high acidity, subtle floral and herb tea aromas, generally oak aged.

Muscat Canelli: intense aroma marks muscat grapes, grown for wine and table use.

SAUVIGNON BLANC

It's my favorite white wine varietal—I like the over-the-top grassy style that's today's popular alternative to yesterday's make-it-like-chardonnay version.

Mason, Merry Edwards and Cliff Lede all offer that convertible-top-down-on-a-warm-day sort of appeal—it may not be a wine you want to curl up and write and opera about, but the bottle sure gets finished fast. If you're looking for a more "adult" experience try the Gary Farrell—the same youthful exuberance is lurking just beneath a cloak of toasty oak and a more rich texture.

CHARDONNAY I

If Chardonnay were a woman she'd have an extraordinarily eclectic wardrobe: restrained to racy. Her moods would range from flirtatious and fun to serious and focused. In other words Chardonnay is not one-dimensional, but rather it is a captivating, multi-faceted, and often surprising variety. Chardonnay's stylistic diversity originates in the vineyard. Chardonnay is planted as far north as Washington state and as far south as sunny Santa Barbara. Typically an early ripening variety, Chardonnay can be subtle and compelling when cultivated in cooler vineyard sites. Though when cultivated in warmer regions Chardonnay will be bold, ripe, and showy. Diversity of terroir is only half the story when it comes to producing Chardonnay.

CHARDONNAY II

Decisions made in the winery are as important as the cultivation of the fruit when it comes to producing not only a fine wine that expresses its terroir, but a stylistically distinctive wine that expresses the artisanship of the winemaker. The old adage 'great wine comes from great fruit' certainly pertains as much to Chardonnay as it does to other varieties. Chardonnay producers in particular use a wide array of winemaking practices in order to influence the style of the resulting wine. For instance, the use of oak barrels both in the fermentation and aging of Chardonnay can, when used judiciously, add pleasant notes of toast, vanilla, caramel and a variety of other aromatic cooking spices. Some winemakers choose not to use oak at all, allowing the purity of the fruit to express itself in the resulting wine. Here at Lark Creek Steak we offer a stylistically diverse Chardonnay selection. The bond they all share, regardless of whether they are stylistically restrained or racy, is balance.

PINOT NOIR

Sense of place: pinot noir reflect where it is grown more than other varietals. You'll notice a number of place names that keep popping up among our listing of pinot noirs: a dozen from Russian River Valley, half dozen from Sonoma Coast, three from Santa Rita Hills, and three from Anderson Valley. That's not some sort of ranking, but it is an indication that this grape flourishes in particular places. It likes the weather to be cool, particularly at night. Each of these appellations gets a nightly blanket of cold fog. Cool nights preserve acidity in the grape while cool climate overall allows the grapes to mature slowly. Additionally pinot noir (like most wine grapes) likes well drained soil with low fertility-mountain soil.

MERRY EDWARDS

She was tapped as a rising star at an early age when she was named winemaker at Mount Eden Vineyards in 1974. She relocated to Sonoma and continued to build her reputation at Matanzas Creek Winery. In 1997 she went out on her own, founding Merry Edwards Wines, specializing in single vineyard pinot noirs from Sonoma's Russian River Valley (though she makes a dynamite sauvignon blanc too). Merry makes wines that are unique to their vineyard but have a consistent unctuous, extracted richness. Her style emphasizes fruit but without turning the wines into one-dimensional caricatures. Each wine has great acidity, structure and she uses a variety of oak barrels like blending spice. Sadly, my favorite vineyard, Windsor Gardens, was pulled out and is now a housing development (people, get your priorities straight!). I've found a ready substitute in Klopp Ranch.
Quinn McKenna

Pinot Meunier: another clone of pinot noir. Grown for use in sparkling wine; good acidity, pinot noir character but less of it.

Sangiovese: the grape responsible for Chianti; the most heavily planted grape in Italy. Can make a high acid wine, can be tough to grow, may not yet have achieved its best here (yet), but don't count it out.

Carignane: the Kudzu vine of grapes, can produce 12 tons of grapes per acre (3-4 times most other varietals). Most widely planted grape in France-which may explain why much inexpensive French wine is undistinguished.

Barbera: if you keep it pruned it can produce a nice wine, with bright acidity and currant/blueberry aromas. Handles oak well.

Rhone Blends: Generally refer to blends of mourvedre, grenache and syrah-the three major red grapes of the Rhone Valley in France. Think of mourvedre for spice and gamey-ness, Grenache for vibrant fruity aromas and soft mouth-feel and syrah for depth, texture and body.

Petite Sirah: deep color, jammy aroma, firm tannins.

Featured Winemaker / Robert Lindquist

Bob Lindquist brings a passionate interest to several things in his life. He is passionate about baseball, rock & roll and wine and as much as we also like baseball and rock & roll, it is Bob's passion for wine we are highlighting here.

Bob began his involvement with wine in the Santa Barbara-Central Coast region of California and there he has remained, continuing to build his reputation and renown as a winemaker of tremendous talent and passion. He founded Qupe Winery in the early eighties and largely influenced by the wines produced in France's Rhone region decided to focus his own winemaking on Rhone varieties. Currently there is an abundance of Rhone varieties grown in the Santa Barbara- Central Coast area but in the eighties miniscule amounts were planted, so include "pioneer" winemaker on Bob's resume as well. Bob has put all that experience to good use. Qupe produces a small amount of excellent chardonnay and the white Rhone varieties have evolved beyond the status of "hidden gems" to mainstream recognition, but it is the syrahs from Qupe that garner the most attention. Bob has worked hard to source, develop and nurture many superb grape sources throughout the Santa Barbara region, such as the Bien Nacido Vineyard, and it is these relationships coupled with Bobs winemaking skill that result in the many excellent single vineyard syrahs in the Qupe portfolio. We share Bob's passion for wine and feel fortunate to have a wide selection of Qupe wines for you to consider. Look for wines possessing tremendous flavor, balance and attention to place.

Syrah: In California the grape displays less of its "classic" peppery-ness and more soft round mouth-feel and lingering finish. The wine smells like black currant and blackberry with some cedar and licorice drifting through. When you are looking for a medium plus bodied red without the harsh tannins and acidity of many cabernets and with more structure than most pinot noir-a syrah is the wine to look for.

Qupe Syrah

The Bien Nacido

Hillside Estate is the premier syrah from Qupe, this very special hillside vineyard site produces wine of great depth, complexity and balance.

The Purisima Mountain syrah produced from a winery located in the Santa Ynez Valley results in wines that are typically spicy, aromatic, balanced and refreshing with well rounded tannin.

The Bien Nacido

Vineyard syrah or Old Press syrah, are sourced from a variety of vineyard sources throughout the Santa Barbara and Paso Robles regions. A lot to choose from!

MERLOT

The once (all too) popular Merlot grape having suffered for its ubiquitousness, is now, thankfully, being planted with a more discerning interest in the quality (not quantity) of the resulting fruit. Merlot is an elegant variety that does produce some of the best, and most sought after, red wines in the world. Here in the United States the finest Merlots are produced throughout Napa Valley and in Washington State. In comparison to Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot tends to produce softer more fleshy wines. However many Merlot producers, notably those found in Washington state and in California's warmer environs, are making powerfully concentrated wines, that have wonderful weight and lushness on the palate. If you are one of the many who vowed against Merlot because of some unpleasant experiences of a decade or more ago then it is time for you to revisit the Merlots of today. So drink Merlot and enjoy!

Featured Winemaker / Paul Draper

Paul Draper and the wines of Ridge Vineyards have been awarded and acknowledged both nationally and globally. Through his efforts to explore and expose the ability of both zinfandel and cabernet sauvignon to express a sense of place here in America, Paul Draper has successfully been able to produce wines that appeal to the palates on all sides of the Atlantic. Ridge Vineyards was one of the first to demonstrate zinfandels potential as a wine that could be considered on equal footing with some of the best wines produced worldwide. Ridge Vineyards has also produced the exceptionally long-lived and internationally recognized cabernet sauvignon from the Monte Bello vineyard.

The wines from Ridge Vineyards have had a resounding impact on my own personal interest in wine. What seems like many years ago, it was a visit to Ridge as a guest on a microbiology class field trip that I tasted Monte Bello cabernet sauvignon and my wine path was diverted. Some years later it was a tasting of the Ridge Geyserville that led me to appreciate how zinfandel could be considered on a similar level to other fine and long established varieties.

Paul Draper has long been an advocate of the importance of terrior, a concept that is largely overlooked and from an American viticultural perspective largely dismissed. The wines of Ridge Vineyards make an overwhelming argument for a sense of place. The wines can be deep, concentrated with tremendous fruit character, great balance and a defined sense of place.

Bonny Doon Recioto of Barbera- the sweeter side of blackberry and cassis, this one is seriously good.

Dolce made from the presence of a special type of fungus called the "noble rot". This "noble rot" doesn't occur every vintage, so some years this wine won't be produced. The idea of rotten grapes sounds terrible and the resulting grapes look pretty terrible but this fungus has a unique way of making wines that are rich, deeply flavored and balanced. The best sweet wines made worldwide are a result of "noble rot." Dolce possesses honey-suckle, melon and dried apricot flavors and a silky texture. This is a special wine.

McCrea Roussanne-very small production. Full of pears with hints of coconut.

Quady Essensia-bright, fresh flavors of orange blossom and apricot.

DESSERT

Most of us like things that taste sweet. Sweet wine was at one time the universally preferred style for all wine and many a wine aficionado have cut their wine teeth on sweeter styles of wine. Today the truly great sweet wines are intended for drinking as an accompaniment to dessert or as simply dessert itself. The majority of dessert style wines are produced in very small quantities, produced with varying techniques but all sharing the wish for similar results, concentrated sugar, intensity, and complexity. The resulting wine styles can be fresh and fruity, honeyed and richly textured, profound and complex and can be some of the most sought after and long-lived wines produced anywhere.
